... that's the only way I know how to reach the top: one step, then another.

After his brother-in-law Chris passed away, author Jeff Belanger made the decision to take the trip of a lifetime, both in honor of Chris and in pursuit of clarity about his own life and goals. The Call of Kilimanjaro is a day-by-day record of Belanger's ascent to the peak of Africa's highest mountain.

By turns contemplative and irreverent, joyful and thoughtful, boyish and wise, this is a book for all ages and a powerfully spiritual memoir for armchair travelers. By example, Belanger teaches us to take stock of our accomplishments, eye the lofty goals we've placed in front of ourselves, and push higher than we've ever dared, turning an honest eye toward past, present, and future, through the end of life and beyond.

JEFF BELANGER is an author, adventurer, journalist, and one of the most visible paranormal researchers today. He is also the Emmy-nominated host, writer, and producer of New England Legends on PBS and the weekly New England Legends podcast as well as the host of the cable/web talk show 30 Odd Minutes. Jeff lives near Boston, Massachusetts.

Meet the Authors

Jodi Ecker Detjen

Kelly Watson

Jodi Ecker Detjen and Kelly Watson are the founders and managing partners of Orange Grove Consulting, which helps organizations improve gender equity and inclusivity through consulting tools and training programs.

What would you say is the biggest challenge facing modern workplaces?

The workplace is rapidly diversifying, yet leaders struggle with inclusion. We don't recognize when diversity is missing, we don't measure it, and we don't train it. So while the bottom of the pipeline may finally be attracting fair representations of diverse workers, strongly embedded counterforces ensure we will still have homogeneity at the top for the foreseeable future.

In our time of #MeToo, are you seeing positive changes in gender inequity?

Yes: A veneer has been cracked. What #MeToo did was show women that they were not alone—that their harassment and bias experiences were not unique, and thus not their fault. It seems strange, but this was eye-opening for women because the basic underlying assumption was shown to be flawed.

In top-down management structures, how do organizations REFRAME?

Well, it always has to start with the top. But a flawed assumption most organizations have is that they operate a meritocracy. So, this needs to be REFRAMED. We don't have a meritocracy, or else there would be equal representation. Too many times people assume that those in top positions will “naturally know” how to “do” inclusion. How would they know that? By looking at it as a skill, rather than judging, it then can be taught and learned.

What inspired you to found Orange Grove Consulting?

We realized the traditional approach to gender equity failed to recognize the business opportunity gender equity provides for organizations. And let's face it, money talks. Because of our 50+ years of combined operational consulting experience plus our data-based academic research, we felt we could approach the problem from the business perspective and deliver tangible ROI.

Empower your organization through equity.

Gender equity at work. Whose problem is it? And how can one person or one organization make a dent in such an entrenched social issue?

Let's take a look at the facts: empowering women empowers everyone. Workplaces that treat women equitably and pay them fairly do better across the board. And most critically: gender equity is not a zero-sum game. Everyone stands to gain.

The Next Smart Step provides a clear and practical guide to understanding gender inequity, implementing solutions, and building an enduring, positive organizational culture. Based on principles of self-awareness, flexibility, communication, openness, and mutual respect, this approach puts real power to effect real change in your hands—whether you're an intern or an executive.

This is our 1776 moment.

Expert economist Manuel Hinds examines our national past and present (up to and including the 2020 presidential election) to warn us about the danger of abandoning our democratic principles precisely when we most need them.

Merging expert historical, political, and economic analysis, In Defense of Liberal Democracy shows how our recent technological revolution—what Hinds calls the Connectivity Revolution—has led to a crisis of division. Assessing the angry rhetoric and polarization of current political and social discourse in the United States, Hinds considers the dangers of seeking populist solutions to our current upheaval and shows how the traditions and institutions of liberal democracy restored prosperity, freedom, and social equity during the Industrial Revolution, the Great Depression, and other periods of political upheaval.

How innovation saved a city.

Since the 1600s, Boston has been a font of world-changing innovations—public education, abolition, the first organ transplant, the telephone. Pioneering advances in everything from rockets to robotics. It all happened here. The question is, why Boston? What makes this city special?

Engaging spotlight essays by Dr. Robert Krim and tech journalist Alan Earls break down the building blocks, or “innovation drivers,” that have made Boston a powerhouse of invention and brought it back time and again from four major economic collapses. From boom to decline and back to boom, Boston has maintained an ability to reinvent itself. At a time when the national and global economy is reeling from the pandemic, Boston Made lays out a roadmap through adversity for a dynamic, world-class city.
