Why is it so hard to ask for help, especially when we need it the most? Why would someone resist receiving proper care for their mental health issues, substance abuse problems, or poor symptom management? In CHOOSING HELP, psychologist Tracy Stecker provides an in-depth exploration of these barriers to betterment—both the mindsets that produce them and most importantly, how to break them down.

CHOOSING HELP draws on decades of proven research to create an evidence-based intervention system for changing a person's thought process into one which can make the choice to get the treatment they need. With concise analysis and illuminating case studies, this easy-to-reference book unpacks commonly offered excuses for avoiding treatment, such as: "Treatment won't work." "I can handle it on my own." "What about the stigma?"

Choosing Recovery Is Your Decision to Make

TRACY STECKER, PHD, is a psychologist at the Medical University of South Carolina and at the Center of Excellence for Suicide Prevention in the Department of Veterans Affairs. Dr. Stecker's work focuses on help-seeking behavior among individuals with mental health and substance use concerns. Features a foreword from CHARLES W. HOGE, MD, a retired Colonel of the U.S. Army who directed the U.S. military's premiere research program on the mental health and neurological effects of the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq at the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research.
